Statement from Quizlet

Our mission is to improve education, and we have millions of students and teachers using Quizlet study sets every day in every country of the world to get excited about learning and improve their performance. With over 100 million study sets created to date, only a small percentage are inappropriate. Whenever we hear about cheating, we take a number of steps to actively combat it:

- We reach out to teachers who let us know about it and asked them to send us any offending study material they've found on Quizlet.
- We immediately take it down.
- We use it to train our tools to automatically identify 'bad' material when posted, flag it for our support team, and allow us to take it down.
- We also have Community Guidelines that explicitly state that Quizlet is not intended to be used for cheating and to report any suspicious study sets to us if found.

Statement from UCF

“UCF is aware of tools such as Quizlet, and we’ve been working with both students and faculty members to address this type of technology.

There are a host of different study resources online, and what’s important is the intent with which students use them. Quizlet can be used ethically, but we encourage students to make their settings private so that the tool remains a resource for them but does not give others an unfair advantage.

Students come to UCF to learn, and taking unethical shortcuts undermines what higher education is all about and puts students’ academic futures in jeopardy.

Additionally, all new students participate in an online academic integrity module that explains UCF’s policies on academic misconduct and teaches them about academic integrity.”
